

Unprepared Line Marking - Sprayed

Sprayed floor marking is most often used in facilities that store in block stacking configurations where products are placed on the floor in lanes or in zones rather than on racking.

Our method of spraying concrete floors is more advanced than the type of floor spray which can be purchased from catalogue suppliers in aerosol cans, due to the paint and machine.

Using specialist machinery and similar paint to that used in our tape and roller option, the spray machine applies floor marking in the fastest way possible. This is very important when access time is restricted.

The edge of the line created by our machine is not as neat as tape and roller and the paint is not as hardwearing due to the use of thinners, however for some facilities this is the ideal alternative providing a budget product and fast finish. Paint applied in this way appears to have waves once cured, this is due to the force needed to spray such durable paint and is not the paint failing.

We do not recommend this application where food or other absorbent stock is stored in exposed conditions. The machine is powered by a petrol motor and paint particles may become airborne and travel which have the potential to taint food and product.
